DARING HOLD-UP AT KELLY

A. J. Smith, Prominent New York Broker, Relieved of Wad of Money.

The thrilling story of a daring hold-up Sunday evening in the vicinity of Kelly was told in Socorro the first of the week by members of a party of Tri-Bullion officials and some of their New York friends who had just returned from a visit of inspection at the Tri-Bullion company's famous Kelly mine. As nearly as the members of the party could determine from the somewhat confused statements of the victim of the hold-up, the facts of the case were as follows:

A. J. Smith, a prominent New York broker, and Samuel W. Traylor, head of the Traylor Engineering company of No. 2 Rector street, New York, and also a director in the Tri-Bullion company, were returning at 7:30 o'clock in the evening from the office at the Kelly mine to their hotel, when three men, one an American and the other two Mexicans, all disguised with shawls over their heads, suddenly stepped from behind a bunch of greasewood, presented a deadly looking weapon to the breast of each of their victims, and gave the peremptory order "Hands up!" The order was promptly obeyed. Mr. Traylor was told to stand aside, however, and Mr. Smith was informed that he was the man wanted. The victim begged hard for his life, and Mr. Traylor quickly advised him to surrender his valuables without protest. The advice was promptly followed, Mr. Smith handing over a roll of money amounting to about $160. Messrs. Traylor and Smith were then allowed to go on their way without further molestation. The latter was somewhat nervous when he reached the hotel, but as soon as the facts of the hold-up became known he was quite overwhelmed with expressions of sympathy from other members of the party. He is not likely soon to forget that evening's thrilling experience in the wild and woolly west.
